During the last year the Admiralty had extreme difficulty in keeping masters of merchantmen to charted courses and has been further troubled by masters who failed to obey etricity minor orders as to lighting, zigzagging and other well known methods of evasion.

This is being overcome, and many more ships are entering ports safely under those such have been presumably smaller craft. The losses this week and last week follow:

London, June 6.—The submarine casualties for the last week have hit another low mark. The total of British ships of all kind sunk is 23, of which is are of more than 1.600 tons, three of smaller tonnage and five are fishing boats. The official announcement of the Admiraity gives the following summary:

"Arrivals, 2.593; sallings, 2.612; "British merchant ships sunk by mine or submarine of over 1.600 tons, including one previously sunk, 15; under 1.600 tons, 2. British fishing vessels sunk, 5.

"British merchant ships unsuccessfully attacked, including four previously, 17."

Despite this success in combating the sign of cheer among naval officials, who contend that Germany has just struck a slump, with every prospect that next week or the week following they will be back in their old form, although heavy traffic across the Atlantic and also to neutral ports is becoming increasingly greater and merchantmen are having far greater success in cluding U-boats than heretofore.
